

THE LUIGI MANGIONE CASE

Constitutional Rights at Risk

Miranda Rights Violation:

Mangione was interrogated without being read his Miranda rights after the interaction began. Despite an officer's instruction to read Mangione his rights, questioning continued, violating his Fifth Amendment Rights.

Pretrial Publicity:

New York City Mayor Eric Adams has appeared in documentaries commenting on the case and publicly referring to Mangione as a terrorist, violating his constitutional right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Double Jeopardy Concerns:

Prosecutors are charging Mangione in both state and federal courts to increase their chances of securing a conviction, seeking either the death penalty or life imprisonment.

Allowing the state case to proceed first places Mangione in a position where defending himself could violate his constitutional rights, including protection against self-incrimination, the right to a fair trial, an impartial jury, and effective legal counsel.

Warrantless Search:

Bodycam footage allegedly confirms:

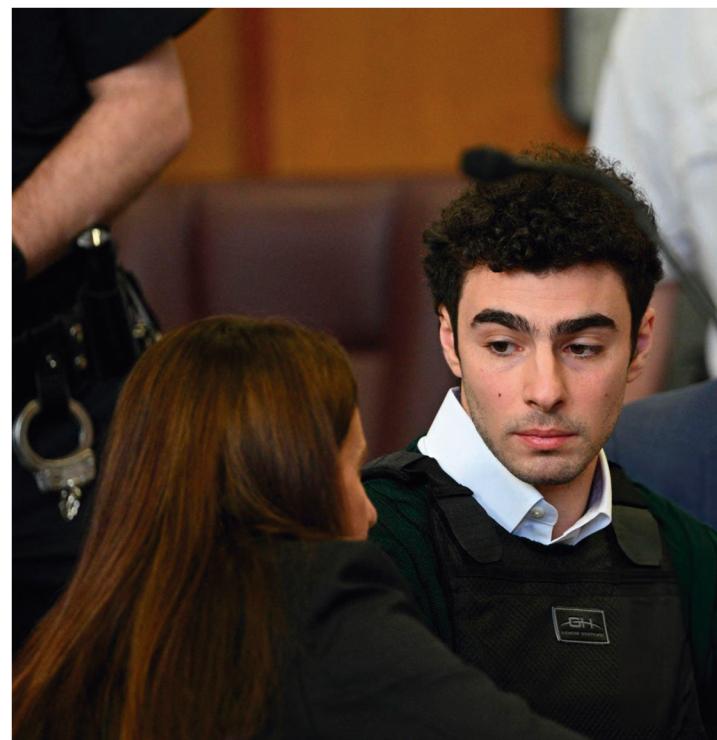

- a. His backpack was moved, isolated, and searched without a warrant.
- b. Police continued to search the bag after Mangione had been removed from the scene.

Luigi Mangione was arrested on December 9, 2024, in Altoona, Pennsylvania, for the alleged murder of UnitedHealthCare CEO Brian Thompson.

Ten days later, on December 19, Mangione was extradited to New York, where he was subjected to a perp walk attended by Mayor Eric Adams, raising concerns about prejudicial publicity and due process.

Despite Mangione's counsel submitting a detailed written argument and making an oral presentation in January 2025 opposing the death penalty, prosecutors informed them repeatedly that no decision had yet been made, citing delays due to the administrative transition and lack of a functioning Capital Review Committee.

However, on April 1, 2025, the Attorney General issued a public press release announcing the decision to seek the death penalty.
